Why give to a school in El Salvador?

Perkin was one of the most affected municipalities by the civil war in El Salvador. The Amún Shéa School was established to provide an alternative school for children based on myriad teaching models, focusing particularly on self-responsibility and individual achievement. With the sub par academic level in the Northeast part of El Salvador, combined with a war ravaged area and the exodus of many of its young people looking for opportunities elsewhere, this region is in dire need of new, innovative educational programs. The school has been widely praised by the local government and supported by the community.
